MMA Essentials

The Winning Mind Set

Hit The Center Of The Bull's Eye

hat pushes you to achieve greatness? What creates that drive you need in order push forward, regardless of obstacles, to accomplish the goals you hold in your heart? What is the motivation? The word motivation comes from the Latin phrase "to move forward" or reason to move forward. So, what is it that motivates you, moves you forward? As we near the end of 2009 and begin a new year, we should think about our GOALS and what we will accomplish as we move forward in the future as a fighter or coach, and in every area of our life!

In this issue's Winning Mind Set column, I would like to discuss the approach to goal attainment that has worked for me. Take 5 minutes to read this and take the action in your life and you will never, ever be the same.

In The Cross Hairs

What is a Goal? A goal is like a target really. If you currently have clear, written goals to lead you forward, you are part of a very unique and elite group. You are aiming at the center of the bull's eve of your target. You are in the top 3% of people who have high aspirations about their personal achievement. It's true, according to the experts less than 3% of North Americans have written, specific, detailed goals. Not only that, about 10% have goals committed to memory. This would be like aiming at the outside rim of your target. Committing goals to memory is not an adequate way to clearly focus on your objective. What about the remaining 87%? Well, they have no goals at all. But, why are goals so important in the first place?

My all time favorite coach Brian Tracy once told me, "If you don't know where you're going, any road will take you there!" Most people don't really know which road to take, simply because they don't have a clear picture of their destination. Without a destination, it's so easy for us to fall into the trap of complacency. To be content, just getting by day to day, without pushing to achieve the things we really want to change in our lives or succeed at. We may rationalize why we can't succeed by using negative self-communication. telling ourselves we don't have the skills, resources, knowledge, and education or time it takes to achieve what we want.

First, it's not knowledge and education that makes people succeed. The world is full of skilled, educated, knowledgeable failures. People who succeed at anything have some very specific methods they utilize to accomplish their objective. But, first and foremost, you must know your objective or goal. People who succeed are those who...

1) Know specifically what they want! They have a specific goal or set of goals they want to achieve. So, write your goals down and be specific; the more detailed, the better. Something truly amazing happens when you write down your goals. It's as if they are beginning to actually process in your mind the moment your pen hits the page. Designate a target date or time period to accomplish those goals; place your written goals where you can see them

2) Have developed the ability to take consistent action. In other words, they will consistently do what it takes to succeed. Self-discipline, attitude, personal beliefs and values all play a major role in motivating us to take action toward our achievements. It is not your intentions, but rather it is your actions that will allow you to succeed. To quote a famous slogan, Just Do It!

3) Have persistence. They don't give up! Every person you see who has achieved greatness has failed over and over to finally succeed. There are few unrealistic goals, only unrealistic time frames to accomplish them. Losers guit when they're tired; winners quit when they've succeeded.

4) Learn from the end-results. If the approach they took didn't work, they adjust their approach again and again until they get the results they want. Let me use an analogy to expand this idea. When I lived near the ocean, I used to sail whenever I had the opportunity. When a sailboat leaves a harbor in pursuit of a destination, it sets its compass in the direction of its objective. But, as the boat is challenged by the currents, the wind, and the weather the captain will need to change the boat's direction and adjust the approach in order to succeed and reach his destination. Be flexible in your approach. You are the captain of your destination.

The law of harvest is to reap more than you sow. Sow an act, and you reap a habit. Sow a habit and you reap a character. Sow a character and you reap a destiny. -James Allen

Develop The Muscle

One of the best ways to begin with goal setting as a habit is to work from a list on a daily basis. Here are a few tips on using a list to increase your productivity and develop your goal setting muscles.

1) Work from a list every day. Update your list for the next day the night before or first thing in the morning. Write it down! Something amazing will happen when you materialize your thoughts on to paper.

2)Hold fast to your "standard procedure" of working from your list, refusing to do anything that is not on the list. This is accomplished by updating your list as you work through your day.

3)Evaluate tasks by deadline. Whenever possible work on your largest or most difficult, least favorite task first. This will ensure it gets done, not ending up on the next day's list. If you insist on completing the smaller tasks first you will make little headway. Small tasks will continue to appear as your day unfolds.

4)Evaluate your tasks for value and return. Which task will bring you the most return on your effort? One whale is worth a thousand buckets of

5)By working from a list everyday you will accomplish more in a week than most people do in months or even years.

6) Remember there is no such thing as unreasonable goals, just unreasonable time frames.

I just want to be known as the best ever, is that too much to ask?

Ready, Aim...Fire!

I write my goals in a small hardbound journal. Use what you feel is best for you.

1) What do you want?

Write it down clearly and in complete detail. This is the "What" pertaining to your

Example: I will compete in five Pro MMA events in 2010, being in the best shape of my life and performing to the best of my ability. I will develop my MMA skills by continuous, regimented daily training in the following areas: Stand up-footwork, individual striking w/ all tools, combination skills in Muay Thai. Transition/ground-positioning/ angling, clinch, takedowns, submission, escapes/counters, G&P. Attribute qualities- timing, power, strength, flexibility, focus cardio and muscular stamina, dietary discipline, and

- 2) Make an "Action Plan" of everything you need to do to over the next few days, weeks, months get you closer to your goal. This is the "How".
- 3) Organize your list in terms of activities pertaining to time and priority. What's first, what's most important? Next you need to set your deadlines and several subdeadlines. This is the "When"
- 4) Why is this important to you? What would it mean to you? In order to be successful we must create a meaning for what we do. How would accomplishing these goals affect your life and your future? It is usually who we become while accomplishing our goals that is most important. This is the "Why".
- 5) Take action toward your goal and begin immediately to do something to move you in the direction of your goal. What are you committed to do to take your first step

Direct 100% total commitment toward the accomplishment of your goal. Flexibility is absolutely crucial; if what you're doing isn't working, change your approach, if that doesn't work, change your approach again until you succeed.

"It is my opinion that developing a mindset of having clear, distinct, written GOALS and working toward these goals, daily and incrementally is the single most significant thing that will determine your ultimate success and absolute happiness in your life!"

Tapping Into Your Sub-Conscious

Any person who wants to be successful in anything, regardless of what it is, he or she will fail far more times than they will succeed. Riding a bike, we all fell down far more times than we succeeded in staying up at first. Learning to walk, did you ever see a bal walk on his first try? Conversely, did you ever see a baby get so frustrated and angry because he didn't walk perfectly that he quit? So frustrated that he gave up and never tried again because he hadn't gotten it yet? Of course not! But have you ever seen non-babies do that? Not you personally, but maybe people you know? Many people value success, but they also want to avoid feelings of failure (or feeling like a failure). The problem comes when a person's fear or avoidance of failing prevents him from taking action and trying, or going through the necessary repetition of trial and error that it takes to master something. Remember, we all move toward pleasure and away from pain. Some of us are driven more by moving toward pleasure, some more by away from pain. Many times people set goals that have very little to do with what they truly value in life, or they set goals that do not take into account what they want to avoid. Then they wonder why they aren't following through, and label themselves as lazy or undisciplined, that's rarely the case. Usually, the problem is that people's goals have nothing to do with their value system or how they like to be reinforced.

There is a unique cycle that occurs when we predicate goals that are in alignment with our values. As we work toward our value driven objective we feel totally natural in our pursuit and once this goal is achieved, our values are satisfied and supported by our accomplishment. Therefore our goals support our values and our values in turn support the direction of our goals. At this point you may say,"That's great, Kevin"...but

How can I use this?

Here's how! Get some leverage. Think of the goal or objective you wish to achieve, but have had difficulty completing. Make a clear picture of this goal in your head. Now, thi of how great you would feel, when this goal was completed. Think of all the benefits would gain and the feeling of total satisfaction knowing that you have accomplished this. Visualize yourself with a huge smile on your face, as you finish. Got that picture clear and complete in your mind's eye. GOOD! Now, think of the negative emotions associated with not completing this same task. Think of the frustration you've experienced now and before as this goal once again slips away from your grasp. Think of how you will feel in the future as you embrace the loss of satisfaction and negative drain these emotions have. as you face the reality that you failed only because you have given up! Run these two mental videos over and over in your head. These visions are the carrot and the stick. Now, write "The Carrot and the Stick" on a small note pad and put the note somewhere conspicuous, somewhere you will see it daily for at least one week. When you see it run your mental video. In a short time you will begin to change your association to this goal and connect your emotional content via your values and the principle of pain and pleasure. I've had amazing results with this, and if you believe it, and try it, so will you. You'll never get where you want to be by focusing on what you fear. Instead focus on where you want to be. Have a great new year and the best of success in your near future!

"I have missed more than 9.000 shots in my career. I have lost almost 300 games. On 26 occasions I have been entrusted to take the game-winning shot... and I missed. I have failed over and over and over again in my life. And that's precisely why I succeed." -

Each issue I will help you add another facet to your Mental Toolbox and guide you to develop your Mind Game. I look forward to hearing vour results and feedback.

Kevin@thewinningmindset.com

© Copyright 2009 all rights reserved, Kevin Seaman. Kevin Seaman has been involved in martial arts and martial athletics as a practitioner, competitor and trainer for over 35 years He currently holds instructor rank certification in seven mar tial arts systems, is a certified boxing coach and performance specialist, having trained thousands of athletes. Seaman currently assists the training of several Pro MMA fighters. He has contributed to several magazines and authored two books. Check out his book and more Winning Mind Set performance

AUTHORITYMAG.COM • 2009 ISSUE VI AUTHORITYMAG.COM • 2009 ISSUE VI